

Honore De Balzac, Vol. 8: Provincial Life (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Honore De Balzac, Vol. 8: Provincial Life You who, by virtue of the privilege accorded the Raphaels and the Pitts, were a great poet at the age when men are usually so puny, have, like Chateaubriand, like all men of genuine talent, been compelled to combat the envious, ambuscaded behind the pillars or crouching in the subterranean caverns of the newspaper. Therefore do I desire that your victorious name should participate in the victory of this work, which I dedicate to you, and which, in the view of some people, is a manifestation of courage as well as a narrative faithful to the truth. Did not journalists, like marquises, financiers, doctors and lawyers, belong to Moliere and his stage? Why then should the Comedie Humaine, which castigat ridendo mores, omit a single power, when the Parisian press omits none?
